Pretreatment of mice infected with irradiated cercariae of Schistosoma mansoni with antisera to adult worm membranes blocked the development of a local cell-mediated immune (CMI) response to challenge with normal cercariae. This effect of the antisera was dose dependent and the blocking activity was associated with antibodies directed against an antigen shared between normal and irradiated cercariae. The immune response was shown to be of the CMI type, as it could be blocked by treatment of mice with antigranulocyte monoclonal antibodies before challenge with normal cercariae.Blog To the women of all time As a young girl, when I would
